

The 'Working Waterways' series

Maidens Trip

Emma Smith WW1

The war-time scheme under which women were recruited to crew canal boats. How it felt to be a teenager working on the boats.

Troubled Waters

Margaret Cornish WW2

First published over 40 years after the war, this book provides a balanced account of the war-time canal scheme, tackling aspects which no-one else raised.

Bread Upon the Waters

David Blagrove WW3

The author carried timber, coal and cocoa residue for Willow Wren. The great freeze of 1962/3 virtually wiped out long-distance narrow boat traffic.

Idle Women

Susan Woolfitt WW4

This book describes in unadorned detail the life of a 'trainee' working on canal boats during the Second World War.

The Amateur Boatwomen

Eily Gayford WW5

The author started boating during the Second World War, and went on to become a trainer of the wartime all-women crews.

Anderton for Orders

Tom Foxon WW6

This book describes the exciting and colourful life of a teenager who gave up office work in 1950 to crew a canal boat.

Very limited number available

The Quiet Waters By

David Blagrove WW7

This book describes the colourful experiences of a young man who worked as a Thames lock-keeper, while also running a narrow-boat carrying company.

Hold On a Minute

Tim Wilkinson WW8

The author and his wife hired a pair of boats from the Docks & Inland Waterways Executive in 1948, and spent a year carrying cargoes on England's canals.

Number One

Tom Foxon WW9

Tom Foxon is demobbed from the RAF and sets himself up in business as an owner boatman or Number One.

Following the Trade

Tom Foxon WW10

Fresh from National Service, the author has become the owner of a working narrow boat, wanting to trade as far and wide as the canal system will allow.
